When my husband complimented me, he wasn't just trying to make me feel good. His looks of admiration were from a man who'd been with me in the battle, fighting with me and helping me anticipate the places I could be wounded by my own sin—or wound others. Today I never doubt whether my husband is being straightforward.

Family Life Tell Me What You Remember

I've gone through most of my life with my family not supporting me on anything. No one ever backed me up or defended me when things happened. Anytime something would happen and I got hurt, or someone attacked me verbally, it was always my own fault. I was never taught how to deal with or handle bullies, and my family never protected me.
