Rudolf Otto, an early 20th-century German theologian, attempted to describe to some extent the basic ways of experiencing the transcendence of the “ holy. ” He called these the experience of the “ numinous ” (the spiritual dimension), the utterly ineffable, the holy, and the overwhelming. The “ holy ” is...

Rudolf Otto - The Idea of the Holy. | Britannica

Otto starts The Idea of the Holy by arguing that the non-rational in religion must be given its due importance, then goes on to introduce and develop his notion of the numinous. As a kind of first approximation for the wholly new concept he is giving us, Otto characterises the numinous as the holy (i.e. God) minus its moral and rational aspects.

Rudolf Otto's The Idea of the Holy 1: Summary

Rudolf Otto's thesis is thought provoking, and will be consonant with the experience of many spiritually sensitive people. His central concept is the "numen"--a classical Latin word which refers to the Divine, insofar its presence can be sensed by those who are sufficiently sensitive.

Fear of the Shadow, the daemon, is the beginning of subjective religious experience according to Rudolf Otto in The Idea of the Holy. Our utterly deferential fright is encapsulated in that hoary Old Testament expression, “ the Wrath of Yahweh. ” (18) Otto calls it the numinous experience, when our “ blood runs cold ” and our “ flesh creeps. ”

Rudolf Otto's The Idea of the Holy has powerfully impacted the psychology of religion at least in part because it reads the human document in a profoundly insightful way, offering us an astute account of our ability to know the infinite in the midst of a finite world. It is a transcendental psychology that provides a means of expressing the human capacity to distinguish between the sacred and profane and to apprehend the self-revelation of God.
